Slip Sliding Away By Evan Kramer

It was Sunday and a fine day in the neighborhood to go out and see what the world looked like after days of rain. I loaded up Honeybear in the back of the pickup truck and off we set for Humbug Mountain State Park and a ride through the Highway 101 slide zone. Because of the barrage of rainstorms that have hit the area, Highway 101 from just north of the Rocky Creek slide almost to the Brush Creek Bridge is showing severe signs of wear and tear and sliding as are many areas all the way to the state line.

The southbound lane of Highway 101 just north of the Rocky Creek slide has dropped at least one foot and that part of the highway is closed. Before you get there from the north you reach the flagger and have to wait until the pilot car guides you south to the Brush Creek Bridge. Traffic is now limited to one lane with a waiting time between 15-20 minutes to head either south or north. There are a couple of other slides where the guardrails have noticeably dropped off along the southbound lanes. The pilot car averages no more than 30 miles per hour but the sun was shining and the view was spectacular which of course is why the highway was built in its present precarious location.

It is always enjoyable taking a walk in Humbug Mountain State Park in winter because you almost have the park to yourself. There are two park hosts staying at Humbug and on Sunday one family braving the weather and camping in their recreational vehicle. We hiked through the campground sections to the beach where Brush Creek meets the ocean but it was near high tide and there wasn't any beach to walk on that day. We walked back through the park along Brush Creek which was flowing quite full, as could be expected, and then walked part of the way up the trail that once was Highway 101. Even that wasn't easy as one of the main feeder creeks to Brush Creek flows across it and a few years ago it knocked down the substantial wood and concrete bridge. Normally you can walk across the creek but not this Sunday. Plans are to replace the bridge with one that can also be used by emergency and park service vehicles when the money becomes available.

Then it was back on through the slide zone and don't you know it I was the second car in line so had a 15 minute wait. From there we headed to the Port of Port Orford. You can keep track of road conditions at ODOT's web site www.tripcheck.com. As of Tuesday the most current update on road conditions from Mileposts 302-306 was dated January 13. ODOT has arranged the website for ease of use and updates it regularly and even includes contact phone numbers.

Crab season finally opened last week in Port Orford with Norcal making the first buy of crabs (the company only buys live crabs). Fishermen and buyers have agreed on a price of $1.35 per pound for the crab. Vicky Nowlin, the buyer for Norcal, said that as of Sunday afternoon, they had bought 25,000 pounds of live crab. Many fishermen were taking their crab pots out and setting them on Sunday, so it won't be long before the other buyer, Hallmark Fisheries, has some sizeable totals to report. The third fish buyer at the Port – Starvin Marvin Seafood, was not at the dock on this very busy Sunday afternoon. Monday and Tuesday the area got hit with high winds and surf and activity ceased at the Port with many more crab pots still to set at sea before the fishermen get their first pull.

The Army Corps of Engineers and the Port have arranged for the area off the dock to be dredged started Monday, January 23. Nehalem Dredging will be back once again with their dredge pump and will work in an area 100 feet long (from the fueling station to the Norcal buying station), 12 feet deep and 30 feet wide. The 12 foot depth is at low mean water.

Representatives from the AOEC will meet with Port Manager Gary Anderson and fishermen on Thursday, 2:00pm, at the Port office to discuss dredging issues.

The Port received over $600,000 for the fiscal year 2005-2006 (October 1 – September 30) for dredging and the goal is to team up with another port or ports and get the clamshell dredge back here and remove a large quantity of sand from the bay. Dredge it or lose it.

Fishing Industry Film

In an effort to rebuild rockfish stocks that are listed as overfished by the National Marine Fisheries Service, Oregon fishermen have experienced major reductions in rockfish trip limits. The Rockfish Conservation Area (RCA) closure restricts fishing effort in thousands of miles of federal waters in the Pacific Ocean. These drastic measures, taken to protect rockfish from further overfishing, threaten Oregon's fishing industry and the economy of coastal communities. The health of Oregon's ocean waters must be protected.

A groundbreaking new documentary, "Common Ground: Oregon's Ocean", presents solutions for protecting and restoring the state's ocean ecosystems backed by commercial fishermen and scientists.

The 30-minute film will screen in Port Orford on February 3 at 6:30pm in the Savoy Theater followed by a Q & A session with scientists, fishermen, conservationists, community leaders and the audience. An opening reception will take place at 5:30pm at the Wild Wind Café. This is a free event. The documentary features stunning views of Oregon's underwater world and the most up-to-date information about the condition of the ocean. Common Ground's release comes as the Bush administration pushes offshore fish farms and offshore oil and gas drilling, without a concurrent commitment to funding ocean protection, alarming state leaders.

Leesa Cobb, a fisherman's wife in Port Orford who is interviewed in Common Ground says, "It is important to learn more about marine reserves. This documentary is informative and the panel discussion after the screening will be a great opportunity to get your questions answered."

Commercial fishermen say the documentary is a must-see cautionary tale. "Advancements in technology allowed us to very aggressively target fish that had been ignored before, or that had been barely fished for years and years," says Jeff Feldner a Newport commercial fisherman since 1972. "All of a sudden there's this goldmine to be exploited, and our nature is that we go do that. We now must do a course correction. Our ability to properly manage those species must catch up with our ability to catch them."

Jane Lubchenco, a marine biologist at Oregon State University, who served on the Pew Oceans Commission, agrees. "If we want to have healthy fisheries and healthy coastal communities we absolutely must have healthy marine ecosystems that provide the bounty."

“A network of marine reserves is a very promising tool that is gaining a foothold around the world,” Lubchenco says. “It’s appropriate for Oregonians to learn about reserves, and talk about them quite seriously.”

“There’s a clear sense of urgency for establishing marine reserves on our coast because there’s probably no way to rebuild our rockfish populations without including marine reserves as part of the solution,” says Mark Hixon, Oregon State University marine biologist and co-author of a new study on rockfish. “We have recently learned that large, old, fat female fish are essential for replenishing rockfish populations because they not only provide more abundant eggs but also eggs that are much more likely to survive than eggs of younger fish. Marine reserves are an essential part of our fisheries management toolbox because they are the only way to ensure that big old fat fertile female fish survive.”

Robin Hartmann, the Ocean Program Manager of Oregon Shores Conservation Coalition and who now serves on the Ocean Policy Advisory Council, says everyone has a stake in the ocean, everyone impacts the ocean and everyone benefits from the ocean. “When we make decisions about Oregon’s ocean we should have the common good, for all Oregonians in mind,” Hartmann says. “It is a must that we involve all stakeholders in the process of deciding of how to protect this public trust - our ocean resources - for the future.”

Common Ground has been shown to sellout crowds in communities throughout the state. The film is bringing people together to discuss ocean management and solutions aimed at conserving marine habitats and marine species in Oregon.

Port Orford Weather

City of Port Orford Public Works Director Dave Pace gave us the weather statistics for the City of Port Orford as measured at the water treatment plant in Buffington Park. For the month of December 2005 the average daily high temperature was 56 degrees and the average low was 41 degrees. The City recorded 15.37 inches of rain in December with

Rotary News

The Port Orford Rotary featured "Students of the Month" and a presentation by Tere Tronson about the North Curry Families and Children's Center (NCFCC). The luncheon was February 12 with Elaine Roeman as a guest along with the honored students and their parents.

Tara Mitchell, who is only in the sixth grade, was the Driftwood School student selection. Her accomplishments include a straight 'A' average and numerous activities. Rob Ashdown, a senior from Pacific High School and a member of the National Honor Society, described plans for a Horticulture curriculum at Oregon State University.

Tere Tronson wore different hats to illustrate the different services and programs at NCFCC located in the Blue Building at 1403 Hwy 101. Many displays included pictures from NCFCC' children and youth theater productions, the edible garden project, the Mommy and Me program, the RAD (Recreation + Adventure = Development program), and more. The Blue Building was started as a "one place center" to serve the many needs of Port Orford and Langlois. The NCFCC helps with everything from flu shots to food Stamps to mental health counseling and employment opportunities. The NCFCC is completely funded by grants and donations.

the Women's Groups discussed plans to jointly publish a Port Orford Christian Women's Cookbook with the proceeds benefiting local community projects. Two members from each group volunteered to serve on this committee. It was also decided that, for future gatherings of Christian fellowship, we would like to call ourselves the "Church Ladies". An interdenominational Bible Study was also discussed.

Letter to the Editor,

To all the supporters of the Common Good Inc. On behalf of the Common Good Inc. the volunteers and I want to thank all of you for your generous contribution to the Port Orford Common Good House.

Thanks to you and others in our community who support the work of The Good House, the many volunteers and I will be able to continue to provide assistance for those in Port Orford who are less fortunate and in need of basic nutritional needs, especially the children.

Children are not responsible for adverse conditions that parents may find themselves in and should not go hungry. When money is short and food is scarce, and the rent is due we, at the Common Good, are able to bridge the gap until the next paycheck comes and going hungry does not happen.

Thank you,

Frank Cramer, President

Letter to the Editor,

What a caring community we live in! When a single Head Start mother had immediate need for a place to live with her two little children, a wonderful number of individuals and groups contributed to her first and second month's rent, deposit, and electrical start up. Due to cutbacks, no public emergency funds were available! Special thanks go to Port Orford Rotary members, ESA, and to St. John's Catholic Church.

The Head Start mother is applying for housing assistance which might take six months to be awarded. So, further help is needed with rent until those funds are available. If you would like to help, please go to Chetco Federal Credit Union, say you want to donate to the Head Start Mom, and they will tell you how to fill out your tax deductible check.

This little family is looking for some furnishings: dressers, side tables, lamps, toy containers and twin bed sheets. If you can spare any of these, call me at 348-2174 and I will pick them up.

Thank you for your generosity. Your humanity certainly makes this a better world.

Jo Rieber
